

Margaret River CERTIFIED ORGANIC & BIODYNAMIC WINE TRAIL

Welcome to the Margaret River Region
A treat for lovers of certified organic and biodynamic wine
A growing number of producers in the Margaret River Wine Region are gaining certification as organic or biodynamic grape or wine producers.
The five producers on this trail are the only ones in the region who have fully certified both their vineyards and their wineries, to guarantee the integrity of their wines. These producers have created a wide range of wines and cellar door experiences for you to enjoy, and they all look forward to sharing their passion for organic and biodynamic farming and winemaking.
Visiting these producers will take you on a relaxed and picturesque journey through the heart of the Margaret River Wine Region and its many attractions.
For more information on certified organic or biodynamic producers in the region, please visit margaretriverorganicwine.com. In addition to the producers on this trail, the website lists all of the producers in the Margaret River Wine Region that have obtained certification of their vineyards, but have not yet become fully certified for both grapes and wine. Most of these producers are located in the same area that is covered by this trail.

Sending wine home

We understand that you will want to buy more than you can carry, but shipping wine home is easy and each winery offers a variety of shipping arrangements, including tax free services for international visitors. The wineries on this trail are also happy to assist you by consolidating your purchases from other trail wineries to make your shipping as cost effective as possible.

About the Margaret River Wine Region

The Margaret River region is renowned for its wine, food, surf, pristine natural environment, beaches, caves and relaxed lifestyle, among many other attractions. The region's natural assets have blended with the ability of the vignerons and winemakers to create a wine region that is one of the best on the planet.

WHY CERTIFICATION MATTERS

Standards for organic and biodynamic produce

Organic and biodynamic food production is founded on the principle of producing food in an environmentally sustainable and socially responsible way, through soil regeneration, water conservation and animal welfare; and minimising the negative impacts.

Certification practices include:

- avoiding the use of synthetic or artificially produced pesticides, herbicides, fertilisers or GMOs (genetically modified, transgenic organisms).
- promoting biodiversity by growing a variety of crops
- preventing soil erosion and improving soil quality
- conserving energy
- protecting wildlife, stream banks and watersheds

Certification requires meeting the standards prescribed by one of Australia's five private certifiers, who base their certification standards on the National Standard for Organic and Biodynamic Produce published by the Department of Agriculture and Water Resources.

For a consumer, the certification of an organic or biodynamic product signifies the integrity of that product.

4. BLIND CORNER
